Your urologist has examined your bladder and urinary passage (urethra). He or she has given you a preliminary report of your examination results. If necessary, medication has been prescribed.

For the first few days following a cystoscopy, it is common to feel some mild discomfort during urination, as well as to see some blood in the urine. To help ease these symptoms, drink plenty of fluids and void frequently.

If you received an anesthetic for your cystoscopy, including sedative medication, you must arrange to be driven home. You should be able to resume all of your usual activities by the next day.

Contact your doctor if:

- burning or bleeding with urination persists beyond a few days
- you experience increasing difficulty with urination
- you develop fever or chills
